Asparagus- Medicinal

Asparagus has the well-known Side effect of making your urine smell strange. We can feed on this Fact, and deduce that Asparagus has medicinal uses in the bladder. When one's urine is unhealthy or de-hydrated, usually seen by a dark color in your urine. Another way to see this is if your urine stings and is highly acidic. When one has these symptoms, they should consider "Water-in-asparagus" treatment. This involves drinking heavy amounts of water, replacing juice or sugary drinks, along with asparagus at every meal. If one wishes, they may consume crushed asparagus in a watered-down paste.

Other, more serious issues in the urine can be treated with Asparagus as well. Bladder infections, characterised by foul-smelling, highly acidic, frequent urination can also be cured by water-in-asparagus treatment. Depending on the severosity of the situation, more water should be consumed.

Bladder infections can be caused by frequent contact and exposure of your pelvic area. They are caused by escheria coli bacteria entering your urinary system.

If you are at a risk of developing kidney stones, you should be regularly consuming asparagus.

Asparagus-General Uses

Asparagus is a very common food item, as you all probably know. It's most pleasant taste is in the tips, and many chefs are ridiculed for throwing away their tips. Rightfully so, as no part of a perfectly good plant should be wasted.

Asparagus is often eaten boiled. This slightly reduces nutrients, but asparagus is still extremely healthy. Asparagus is grown from late april to june.
